Recently I was part of a very important session about professional development (PD) on LinkedIn that I attended. At the session, there was a little quiz where you had to select the right answer for a question. In one of the categories, one of the questions was: what is the top PD event for you? One of the answers given by the speaker was "trainings". In a short time, this was the second time that a speaker from outside the Netherlands (and the speaker was a "regular" invitee by the LinkedIn leadership) mentioned the word "training". The other time was during a day-long leadership event in the Netherlands. Not only did I feel "off" in the room, but throughout my head, I was thinking: where did this session come from that says that "training" means "professional development"? It's not something from LinkedIn or anything other than my head. When it comes to professional development (as in the term itself), it's about your development, your learning, your growing as a person. Is it that hard to say that PD means "growing" and not "training"? Are you the one that never shows up for the "training" sessions? It took me a very long time to realize that I was the 20% that never shows up for the "training" sessions. I've been asked many times at different times in the past: "how does it feel to be the 20%?" But I've always said that I wasn't the 20%, but that was how I always perceived my self and my life. Now, I would like to change my perspective. It's time to see life and my professional development as a journey, a process, where I don't get results in a single day. It takes time to get there. The 20% that never shows up d0c515b9f4
