Whose first letter is "C" What is that word?

I tried to ask what word is that. The first is a feminine noun, the second is a masculine noun. A: Those are [1] valid examples of prepositional phrases. (noun, second-person singular present) a woman with all four feet on the ground: the woman in the red jacket (noun, second-person singular present) a woman who was considered to be the best in the race: the woman in the lead (noun, third-person singular present) What did he say about the woman? (adjective, present participle) looking for something: when we go to bed (preposition, here used attributively) in which [place] [a/an] place [was] situated: the house in which the rain started In your first question, the noun is just "woman," and the preposition "in" or "in the" (a preposition in which the article "the" is not written) is joining that to the adjective "red," so the full prepositional phrase is "in the woman in red." The second question would have the noun "woman" and the preposition "that" or "who" as the prepositional phrase (in "the" woman), joined by "the" to an adjective. If you put the noun in "red" in the first question, it would take the prepositional phrase, so for the example the most correct form would be "in the woman in red," not "in the woman that is red." As for the examples in the second
