Wasserman Schultz is now under fire for her role in securing an IT contract that went to a company she founded. The company, Platte River Networks, was employed by the DNC to run its communications network. The company is suing Wasserman Schultz over the contract, saying it was "inappropriate." Related: Wasserman Schultz says she's committed to her constituents: 'Help me continue to do my job' "I'm not surprised at all by this," Wasserman Schultz said Sunday on CBS' "Face the Nation." "This campaign started more than a year ago, and I've said repeatedly, I'm not going to allow other people's personal attacks against me to affect my ability to represent my constituents." Wasserman Schultz and her Democratic opponent, Tim Canova, have spent much of the campaign criticizing each other. She has derided Canova's campaign as "liars and charlatans." Canova has accused her of hypocrisy for running a campaign that says she wants to focus on her constituents instead of political issues. As for the lawsuit, Wasserman Schultz said: "I stand by the facts that we have communicated and that we have said in our campaign, and that is that there was nothing unusual in that contract. And we've said repeatedly to
