Slay admitted that from 2012 until 2018 he and his wife, Kathleen Slay, conspired with each other and others to fraudulently obtain $4 million in federal government funds for a City-owned home, designed to house HUD-subsidized housing vouchers for low-income families. The house was part of a five-family complex on Lindell Boulevard in north St. Louis. Slay, 66, was a long-time member of the Democratic Party and was Mayor of St. Louis from 1999 to 2013

There are multiple questions in this web page on time series forecasting, but I can't find an answer to my case. I've a panel-data set consisting of 9 variables (X1, X2,...X9) and 3 indicators (T1, T2, T3) that tells the value of the variables at a given time t. The time interval between each t is 1 year. I applied linear regression to the data to generate predictions on the values of X1, X2... X9 at time T3 (you can see that in the first question of this web page). My problem is that for some years (not all of them) T3 lies in an interval where T2 takes any non zero value. In that case, the values of X1, X2... X9 are predicted by the regression model and then converted to T1. I do not want the predictions on T1, that are going to be carried out anyway. Instead, I want to predict time series (X1, X2,... X9) at time T3. Can you please help me? Thank you, A: Apply your linear regression model to the data - including the "T2" variable. The regression model gives you the transformation from "T2" to "T1". Invert this transformation and then apply it to your data. Or, if you have more variables than T1-T3, do it in two steps. Transform the data by "T2"-data, then use the model on that transformed data to transform the "T2"-data into "T1".
