Following the March 9, 1945 surrender in Tokyo Bay, he set about rebuilding the Japanese military, encouraging its indigenous engineers and mechanics, and helping it develop and field the new weapons of the Atomic Age. It was this part of the effort that came to be called the "MacArthur Line," intended to protect the home islands and perhaps, with time, the Marianas, Formosa, and the Philippines, too. The first step was not to "break" the morale of the Japanese military, but to convince it to lay down its arms. d0c515b9f4
